NOBIS QUOQUE PECCATORIBUS (conclusion)

(Taken from Notes Made at the Conferences of Dom Prosper Guéranger)

So far there has been no mention made of any holy woman, in the Canon. Holy Church could never omit them. Who, then, is the first she speaks of? Felicitate — With that great Felicitas, the Mother of the Seven Martyred Children, who thus renewed under the persecution of Marcus Aurelius, the generous sacrifice of the Mother of the Machabees. So illustrious was she, together with her children, that the Catacombs being already opened at the period of their martyrdom, the Christians divided amongst them the bodies of her children, in order to place them in the various cemeteries. Felicitas was martyred on the 29th of

Eleventh Sunday after Pentecost

November; whereas her children had been thus honoured in the preceding July. She was buried in the Cemetery of Priscilla, together with two of her sons. Perpetua, this is that noble lady of Carthage. As her name is put after that of St. Felicitas, this affords us an additional proof that this Felicitas is certainly the one of Rome, and not she who suffered at Carthage together with Perpetua. [*see note below] In this place Perpetua represents her companion as well as the rest who suffered with her; she is emphasised as being the foremost among them all, and as having written certain portions descriptive of her martyrdom. Agatha, Lucia, with Agatha, Lucy: Until the time of St. Gregory the Great, they used to say: Perpetua, Agnes, Cecilia but this holy Pontiff, loving Sicily, where he had himself founded six monasteries, inserted in the Canon the names of the two Sicilian Virgins, Agatha of Catania, and Lucy of Syracuse. Out of courtesy, due to strangers, he gave them the precedence of the two Roman Virgins, Agnes and Caecilia. Why then does Agnes come in here before Caecilia? She did not suffer until under Diocletian, whereas Caecilia is to be found under Marcus Aurelius. Perhaps, harmony of phrase is the sole real reason for this. Anastasia, she is the noble Roman widow who suffered martyrdom under Diocletian, and who is so illustrious at Rome, that formerly the Sovereign Pontiff used to celebrate the Second Mass of Christmas Day in her Church. Although this practice is now discontinued, a commemoration of this great Saint is still made in that same Mass. Intra quorum nos consortium, non aestimator meriti, sed veniae quaesumus, largitor admitte. After having mentioned the Saints anew, the Priest begs that God would deign to admit us amongst them; not assuredly because of any merit of ours giving us any right thereunto, but because God's Goodness, Mercy, and Pardon are able to do so: (but of thine own gratuitous pardon.) The Priest terminates by the ordinary conclusion: Per Christum Dominum nostrum.

*[Note: The identity of the St. Felicity mentioned in the canon of the Mass admits of dispute. Dom Gueranger's opinion is certainly the more plausible, and it would explain why St. Perpetua is mentioned in the second place, where on her feast day, she is mentioned before her companion St. Felicity. It is also to be noted that saints were typically added to these lists in chronological order during the development of the Roman canon in the first few centuries of the Church. The martyrdom of St. Felicity of Rome predates that of SS. Perpetua and Felicity of Carthage by several decades.]
